Chapter 5 by LeibnizPlanist

He then was elected as one of the representatives of the intergalactic council.
His close friends all became worried as to what illness will befall him now.
However, he was unfazed. He said that he had no fear, for...

...he was ALREADY DEAD.

Chapter 7 by Brandy

When this news was made public, the little old man became the figurehead of the burgeoning space zombie population. His visage adorned posters and his catchphrase was emblazoned on the torn t-shirts of the staggering masses.

"Balderdash," his reanimated corpse said with a scratchy voice.

"Braaaaains," the mass of space zombies echoed.

Being the public face of the space zombie apocalypse was not as bad as one would think. The only downside was...

Chapter 8 by LethalPianist

He could no longer truly Balderdash, for he was no longer a man.
It is known that only men Balderdash, and his zombie tongue could not properly say "Balderdash." It instead came out as "Braaaains-dash".

He was despairing the lost of his identity, when one day, God came down to him.

"You want your Balderdash back?" God asked.

The man nodded slowly, careful not to flake off any rotten flesh.

"You'd have to forfeit your seat on one of the intergalactic councils."

The man nodded, more vigorously now.

"You'd also give up your Kingship."

The man barely hesitated before nodding.

"And you'll have to pass on the title of Mayor."

The man thought about it, and replied with a half-hearted "Braaaaains-dash".

"Alrighty then." God said. And then God worked his Godly powers, and the man became a man again.

And he lived happily ever after, saying "Balderdash" all day long.
